Aug. 21, 1834 With what facility have I marked these that pages with the stamp of rolling weeks & months & years—all uniform, all blank! What a strange power is this! It sees through a long vista of time, & it sees nothing. All this at present is mere abstraction, symbols, not realities. Nothing is actually seen: the whole is ciphers, conventional marks, imaginary boundaries of unimagined things. Here is neither joy, nor sorrow, nor pleasure, nor pain. Yet, when the time shall truly come, & the revolving year shall bring the day, what portentous events may stamp the page! what anguish! what horror! or, by possibility, what joy, what godlike elevation of soul! Here are fevers & excruciating pains “in their sacred secundine asleep.” Here may be the saddest reverses, destitution & [Page e.227_0045v] despair, detrusion & hunger & nakedness, without a place wherein to lay our head, wearisome days & endless nights, in dark & unendurable monotony, variety of wretchedness, yet all of one gloomy hue, slumbers without sleep, waking without excitation, dreams all heterogeneous & pl perplexed, with nothing distinct & defined, distracted, without the occasional burst & energy of distraction. And these pages look now all fair, innocent & uniform. I have put down eighty years & fourteen nine twenty-three days; & I might put down one hundred & sixty years. But in which of these pages shall the pen, which purposes to record, drop from my hand for ever, never again to be resumed? I shall set down the memoranda of one day, with the full expectation of resuming my task on the d next, or my fingers

[Page e.227_0046r] may refuse their functions in the act of forming a letter, & leave the word never by the writer to be completed. Every thing under the sun is uncertain. No provision can be a sufficient security against adverse & unexpected fortune: least of all, to him who has not a stipulated income bound to him by the forms & ordinances of society. This, as age & feebleness of body & mind advances, is an appalling consideration. “A man cannot tell what shall be,^a” to what straits he may be driven, what trials & privations & destitution & struggles & griefs may be reserved for him.
